Her curiosity is leading her in new directions

Influenced by her father and grandfather, Yukiko Tsuchiya took her first steps into the pottery world. Apprenticing at Ryutagama completely changed her philosophy. Making robust, easy to use pottery became central to her approach. "I love making pots. To me, there are no tedious jobs. I'm always excited to be in the studio, doing anything related to making pottery.", she explains cheerfully.

Her intensity for pottery is belied by the gentle atmosphere that surrounds her, and her curiosity is the backbone of her work. Last year she made flameware for cooking, this year she made work that changes color over time. We look forward to seeing what challenges she will undertake next.
