A passion for the whimsical

Kosugi san played with clay and went to a pottery class as a child. One day he looked up and realized he'd made a fish, and that was his start in pottery. With one foot firmly planted in sculpture, Kosugi san pursues his work. Much of his work is centered around fish, and they are sculpted in such detail that they seem alive.

He is always trying something new, something to entertain the eye of the customer. It is the embodiment of "A picture is worth 1000 words.". Kosugi san believes Karatsu ware should be entertaining, even if you don't know about tea and flower arranging, and makes an effort to infuse his work with humor that his customers can enjoy. His three dimensional work stops the feet of passers-by, and he hopes it elicits the passion and charm of Karatsu ware for them.
